Abstract

Basic medicine, a major rarely offered at the undergraduate level in medical schools, has become the top choice for postgraduate transfer students majoring in laboratory medicine, rehabilitation, clinical medicine, nursing, and other related fields. Previously, five to ten years ago, graduates with undergraduate degrees in medical laboratory technology and other lab based majors could be recruited directly by hospital departments. However, in today's climate of academic devaluation, such graduates now face a high risk of unemployment immediately after graduation. In daily life, we should all learn to balance work with plenty of rest and find ways to relieve life's pressure.

1 Introduction

Basic Medicine is an undergraduate major offered by regular institutions of higher education, belonging to the basic medicine category. The standard length of study is five years, and graduates are awarded the Bachelor of Medicine degree. This major aims to cultivate advanced professionals in basic medicine who are equipped with basic theoretical knowledge and experimental skills in natural sciences, life sciences, and medical sciences, proficient in advanced instruments and equipment used in basic medicine, and possess a high level of foreign language proficiency, a certain capacity for teaching practice and experimental research, as well as the ability to learn independently, analyze and solve problems independently.

Before and after the 2019 COVID-19 pandemic, hospitals recruited a large number of students majoring in medical laboratory science in response to

4 Conclusion

Don't worry, guys. We will definitely find jobs. So please, give me a damn job, dear HR, have a heart and send me an interview invitation. May the sacred offers come to me! By the way, drink in moderation. Excessive drinking is harmful to your health.
